Early dispatches to the State Department today contained no news of Rear Admiral Southerland and his marine force, who were believed to have fought a decisive battle with the revolutionists, who sought to delay their march to the rel.et of Granada. Officials were puzzled by the afficulties of communication.

No uneasiness was felt for the safety of the United States force. Officials said more than equipped to deal with of news was partially explained by the act that Admiral Southerland must be man, miles from Managua, his base, with no means of sending messages except by

From the meager advices that have been coming to the State and Navy Departments, probably on account of serious interruptions in the workings of the land wires, it appears that Admiral Southerland's determination to attack the rebels in force was reached only after he had exhausted all peaceful means of carrying out his orders from Washington to open the railroad south from Managua, and relieve the terrible sufferings of the inhabitants of Granada. Many of these are of European extraction, and the Washington government has felt it to be a matter of moral duty to protect these people as it would American citizens, in order to avoid any pretext for the landing of European naval and military forces on Central American soil.

Even as it is, that contingency is rapidly approaching, and the British consul general at Managua and the British vice consul at Matagalpa have reported that two British subjects have been assassinated by the rebels at a placed called Achuapa, while these rebels were marching from Leon, whence they had been driven by the American marines to Nueva Segovia, in the north of the country where the adherents of former President Zelaya are threatening trouble.

It is expected, however, that in view of the great activity shown by the American naval forces, the British governmen will be content to delay taking action or its own account, awaiting the result of HARRISBURG, Pa., September 21,-Gov. Woodrow Wilson traveled homeward today from his first real campaign trip since he was nominated for the presidency. In the last five days he visited Iowa, South Dakota, Minnesota, Michigan and Ohio.

"It is hard for me to view the trip objectively," said the governor, when asked about it today. "What interested me most was the friendliness of the people toward me and the friendly look in their faces. I observed especially that the plainest fellows were the most cordial. In 1890 this rate was 25.8. In 1894 it was 19.9. Four years later it had dropped three points. In 1905 it was 8.9. During the fall of that year the filtration plant was put into operation. The following year the malarial death rate had dropped to 3.1. In 1910 it was 2.6. The following year there were no deaths from that disease." Dr. Magruder spoke at length on the score card method of milk standardization, which was first created by Dr. W. . Woodward, the District health officer. This method is now in use in about 100 municipalities, he said. He brought out the fact that the requirements in cities differ, and that much good would result if they were standardized. He explained that many large dairy farms ship milk to as many as six or eight cities, each of which has different milk production rules and requirements. It is necessary that such farms be inspected by the health officer of every one of the cities in question before a permit can be issued. By having a universal standard, Dr. Magruder explained, but one inspection would be necessary Resolution Adopted.

Dr. Magruder offered the following esolution, which was adopted: "Whereas it has been shown that valuable results have been obtained from the requirement for proper inspection of dairy depots and dairy farms before granting a permit for the production and distribution of milk, and that the score card has been of great utility in recording the observations made at such inspections:
